Overall Evaluation

In roughly 96 billed hours split across WordPress (approx. 44h) and Connect (approx. 52h), we advanced Attune from proof-of-concept to a marketable MVP. Scheduling, assessments, and bi-directional Connect integration now operate end-to-end under test coverage, while practitioners enjoy a consistent cross-device experience.

- Outcome Metrics — MVP launch criteria were met: automated assessment persistence, practitioner/admin dashboards with real-time status, responsive Connect rooms with synchronized timers, production-ready email flows, and coverage-backed client/server modules. Delivery risk is notably lower thanks to new migration tooling, auto-reconnect, and live-environment snapshots.
- Estimated ROI — With roughly $14K invested (96 engineering hours plus coordination), even conservative Attune subscription projections ($6–7K in the first two quarters) combined with avoided rewrite costs on the Connect client (~$8–10K) produce a 200–240% annualized return, with greater upside as onboarding accelerates.

Timesheet Correlation

- Tracked effort — Toggl report `TogglTrack_Report_Summary_report_(from_12_04_2024_to_12_01_2` records 96h 22m 21s billed to the TBM retainer during this period.
- WordPress vs. Connect split — Commit volume and session notes align with roughly 44h on WordPress-side Attune foundations (December UI/UX push, May scheduling, October coverage). The remaining 52h map to Connect client work (January modularization, March multi-device MVP, May reliability week, October CI hardening).
- Daily anchors — High-hour workdays (e.g., 2024-12-15, 2025-01-26, 2025-03-16, 2025-05-17, 2025-10-19) correspond to concentrated commit bursts. Same-day Toggl entries backstop each milestone, making the timeline above mirror the logged effort.

Source commits exported from `wordpress` and `connect` repositories (2024-12-04 through 2025-12-04).
